

A choropleth map of the United States showing the number of people per county who have ever been in the military. The map uses a blue color scale where darker shades represent higher counts. A vertical color bar on the right indicates the scale from 0 to 40,000. The highest concentrations are in the central and southern regions, particularly in large states like Texas and California.